College building I looked with much in-

it had done for the world, with such

Despite the relatively poor showing made during 1913 by American aviators in comparison with the achievements of the aviators of foreign counfor the most valuable advance in the science of aviation during that year. This award was the result of Mr. Wright's invention of an automatic stabilizing device. No definite design for this apparatus has yet been decided upon by Mr. Wright, but with experimental applications of his principle he has made several remarkable flights, with and without passengers. Mr. Wright thus describes his inven-

In his experimental flights Mr. Wright says that he kept his hands off the control and steering mechanism for minutes at a time.

ONE TRIUMPH FOR AMERICA MIRROR AND SIDE PANELS

Suggestion for Effective Treatment of Overmantel in the Drawing or Living Room.

There are many ways of treating an overmantel. Sometimes one large picture will be sufficient. And when this picture is a handsome one fasttries, an American, Orville Wright, ened tight to the wall, the effect is has been awarded the Collier prize very good indeed. Sometimes a large mirror will be the best solution; sometimes a tapestry. An especially pleasing design is shown over the mantel in the drawing. The central space is occupied by a mirror, fastened on the woodwork with a narrow molding. This mirror does not reach entirely to the top of the space, but is supplemented by a narrow panel picture, which is also set on with the molding. The side panels are of canvas, with the molding treatment, and are a little darker than the cream woodwork. A slightly different scheme would be to discard the side-panel idea, and have the mirror stretch from side to side. The picture panel at the top would then be longer, reaching the width of the mirror. This panel might be one of Abbey's or an Italian plaster
